Course Descriptions

EN 375: Forms of Literature: Once Upon a Time

This course will look at the development, nature, and purpose of the fairy tale, including: the history of fairy tales, adaptations and different versions, and theories about whether fairy tales help children adapt to the world, or empower them to change it. We'll also look at the forms "modern" fairy tales take for both kids and adults alike and ask if this enduring form still serves the same historical purpose in our age.

EN 484: Special Topics in American Literature: Imagining the American Dream--Minority Voices

People around the world have a vision of America as the land of opportunity, a land where they can realize the "American Dream." This course will explore the variations of that dream as envisioned by the many minorities that comprise the American people: Native Americans, Asian, African, and Hispanic Americans, among others. The course will cover works of all genres (fiction, autobiography, drama, and poetry) from 1900 to the present, raising questions about the existence and validity of the American dream and what it means to different people.

GE 350: Honors Seminar: An Uncertain Future: Leaders and Communities

Questions about society, community, and an uncertain future are much on our minds, as evidenced by the popularity of movies such as The Book of Eli, The Matrix, and I Am Legend, tv shows like The Walking Dead, and books like The Hunger Games and The Road (also made into movies). In this class, we'll look at several novels, stories, and movies that examine communities and their issues, including utopias/dystopias, starting over, and leadership, and ask questions such as: What happens when you're on the wrong side of authority? How can we lead when difference is considered wrong? What are the benefits--and dangers--of knowledge? What happens after The End? How do we begin again? What makes a good society? A bad one? How do we decide?

GS 195: Introduction to Global Studies

This course introduces students to the contemporary phenomenon of globalization, with its wide range of cultural, economic, political and social dimensions. The course captures the complexity of the contemporary world, its layers of interconnectedness among nation states, non-governmental organizations, multi-national corporations, and various ethnic, religious, cultural and other identity based groups. Special attention is paid to diverse views of globalization, the globalization of conflicts as well as to the conflict resolution potential of globalization.

HI 595: World War II and the Holocaust

This course is a study of World War II in both the European and Pacific theaters. It will focus on the impact that the war had on minority groups (both here in the U.S. and abroad); the policies of the Nazi and Japanese authorities towards the countries they conquered; the Holocaust and how the various allied governments responded; the aftermath of the war (including the war crime trials) and the implications of those events on our lives 60 years later.

HIPS 157: Introduction to Peacebuilding

Today, when the global threat of terrorism painfully underscores the global interdependence of people, countries and cultures, there are questions to ask beyond, "Why do they hate us?" We also need to ask: Why are conflicts – from personal and family feuds to war and terrorism – a seeming constant throughout history? What did the great thinkers of the past think about the causes of conflict and the means of conflict resolution? What forms of conflict resolution and peace building exist today? This course is an interactive seminar divided onto two parts. The first part goes through some of the main theories and techniques of conflict interpretation and conflict resolution. The second part of the course applies principles learned in the first part to case study exercises.

HIPS 395: HISTORY OF POLITICAL CONSPIRACIES IN THE UNITED STATES

This course will examine a wide variety of political conspiracies and conspiracy theories in United States History. Topics covered will include conspiracies theories such as FDR's fore-knowledge of the Pearl Harbor attack, McCarthyism, Area 51 and space aliens, the assassination of John F. Kennedy, the moon landing, subliminal advertising, global warming, and a September 11th cover-up. A distinction will be made between conspiracy theories and actual conspiracies such as Aaron Burr's western land plot, the Fisk-Gould Gold Market scandal during the Ulysses S. Grant presidential administration, and Watergate. This satisfies the general-education requirement for either history or political science (but not both).

PH 310: Special Topic: Responsibility & Punishment

In the United States, over two million people are currently in prison. These individuals are serving sentences that either the state or the federal government imposed on them as punishment. But what is the purpose of punishment? And is it morally justifiable to hold anyone in prison? What conditions need to be met to hold someone responsible? These and other philosophically relevant questions require answers, and the most pressing question is the justification of punishment.

TH 300: Theology in Dante's Divine Comedy

The birth of the romance languages created exciting possibilities for medieval Christians to explore their faith. The vivid images of Mary as Queen of Heaven, tender images of the suffering Jesus, the torments of hell and the purifying fires of purgatory were born in the middle ages. Theologians, poets and other visionaries shaped Christians' assumptions about holiness, salvation, justice and mercy. This course examines the historical issues and theological questions that have shaped Christian life for the last eight hundred years. Focusing on Dante's Divine Comedy, it explores the medieval sacred worldview and, ultimately, the faith of the Church. Prerequisite: 300 level Theology courses require one lower level course (100 or 200 level).

TH 336: The Search for God

Why do human beings seek the divine, the transcendent? How is the search for and experience of God articulated? This course explores the personal and religious journeys of well–known spiritual and religious writers. We will read the spiritual autobiographies of diverse figures such as, Simone Weil, Dorothy Day, Thomas Merton, and James Martin, SJ, and Mary Karr to understand their search for God. Students will be encouraged to reflect and compose their own spiritual autobiography in conversation with these writers. Prerequisite: 300 level Theology courses require one lower level course (100 or 200 level).
